Chapter 373: The Fall of the Chaos Monarchs

The multiverse, momentarily at peace after the battle against the Chaos Monarchs' Subjects, began to stir once more. The Chaos Monarchs—ancient beings of immeasurable power who ruled over the darkest corners of the multiverse—were not easily silenced. Their followers may have been vanquished, but the Monarchs themselves were far from defeated. With their power lingering, Sung Jin-Woo knew the time would come when they would rise again.

In a move to ensure that no further threat from the Chaos Monarchs could jeopardize his reign, Sung Jin-Woo summoned Gabriel and Azrael, his two most trusted archangels. The duo, equipped with divine tools granted by their creator, set forth on a new mission: to hunt down and eliminate the Chaos Monarchs once and for all.

The archangels and their vast armies of angels, both light and dark, scoured the multiverse for any trace of the elusive monarchs. Their presence was felt across the realms as they hunted down the Monarchs who had scattered in their attempt to escape. Gabriel, the captain of the battle angels, wielded his celestial powers to track the Monarchs with unmatched precision. Azrael, with his mastery over the dark forces of the abyss, was ready to strike when the time came.

The hunt took them through the farthest reaches of the multiverse, from the deepest voids to the most chaotic realms. With each victory, Gabriel and Azrael grew closer to their quarry, closing in on the Chaos Monarchs' hiding places. It was only a matter of time before the monarchs could run no longer.

Finally, the moment arrived.

Gabriel and Azrael cornered the last of the Chaos Monarchs in a realm that seemed to ripple with unstable, twisting energies. The Monarchs, aware that their end was near, summoned all their remaining strength to resist. However, they were no match for the combined might of Gabriel’s celestial forces and Azrael’s dark army. Using the divine tools bestowed upon them by Sung Jin-Woo, the archangels forced the Chaos Monarchs into submission, their overwhelming power rendering the Monarchs powerless against the might of the archangels.

Once the Monarchs were subdued, Gabriel and Azrael bound them with chains forged from pure divine energy, ensuring that they could not escape. With a final gesture, Gabriel and Azrael invoked a divine spell that teleported the Chaos Monarchs to Sung Jin-Woo’s Prison, a dimension crafted specifically to contain those who threatened the balance of the multiverse.

In the True Absolute One's prison, the Chaos Monarchs were rendered powerless, their once godly might no longer of use against their captor. Sung Jin-Woo, in his infinite wisdom and authority, stepped forward to execute the Monarchs personally. He did not need to feel anger or hatred, for such emotions were beneath him as a True God. Instead, he carried out their execution with cold precision, absorbed their essence, and cleansed their corrupted existence.

The souls of the Chaos Monarchs were then extracted, their essence consumed by Sung Jin-Woo, and their souls transformed into shadows, a fate far worse than death for such powerful beings. These shadows were cast into the Shadow Abyss, where they would serve for eternity, bound to the domain of the Shadow Lords.

With the execution of the Chaos Monarchs, the multiverse was safe once more. The balance had been restored, but Sung Jin-Woo knew that peace was never permanent. There were always new challenges, new threats waiting just beyond the veil of reality.

The True Absolute One remained ever vigilant, his archangels at the ready, his divine army prepared to defend his reign. The defeat of the Chaos Monarchs was but a single chapter in a much larger story, and Sung Jin-Woo would not rest until his domain was fully secured—his enemies vanquished, and his power eternal.
